- 1. The SED in Berlin expects that during the first ten days of May 1952 there will be a general strike, civil disorder, and a "popular uprising" against the Bonn government and the western occupation powers in both West Berlin and West Germany. The strike would be in protest against the negative answer of the West to the Russian peace offer, and against the signing of the contractual agreement.
- 2. The strike whild be expected to develop into a "spontaneous" popular uprising.
 The Russian troops would not intervene, and the SED is said to expect that the Sritish also would refrain from interfering.
- 3. At the climax of the disorders Karlshorst is expected to issue a declaration making large concessions in the direction of the re-empification of all Germany.
